One Night Blossoms Bloom (Or everyone just suddenly got married in one night)

by Invidia_Envy

Summary

Players from Season Five and up would never forget that day... The day where the Great Mass Marriage happened. Whose idea to drink alcohol that night again?

There are some certain reasons why the pros are reluctant to ever have alcoholic drinks, be it in their own parties or the public banquets one. Sure, maintaining their flexibility is the first and utmost reason, as their reflex is one of their greatest assets.

But surely, one or a few sips would be alright, right? Or you can ask them why can't they just drink the beverages with low alcohol contents.

Yeah, no, they got drunk with those too.

Yes, the reason is because of how easily they got drunk, but isn't that a usual occurrence to get drunk or a little tipsy? Once in a while is probably fine... No.

The entirety of pro scene's members from Season 5 above knew the most unbelievable thing would happen if they all drunk even one sip of alcoholic beverage. Season 6 and on? They learned to listen to their seniors' stern warning.

No one wanted nor dared to talk about that night after the fifth season ended with Tiny Herb as its champion. Frankly, no one really paid attention who suggested it first, but since they're in B city (practically the center where all things happen), someone decided to bring in several bottles of fruity juices that had about 2% alcohol content, low enough for normal people but enough to get you a bit warmer.

And in their defenses, it was a pretty cold night... Or maybe it was the air conditioner.

It was definitely the air conditioner.

No one wanted to mention it mainly because of what happened in the next day...

Some woke up to find themselves married to each other and to other people, some found themselves naked in bed next to their rival from the enemy team.

Not even the smartest Glory Textbook could explain what the hell had happened, as apparently he was married too, and to several people at that.

No one knew how they could even get those red books, and no one wanted to know if those even REALLY registered. Chu Yunxiu was having the worst breakdown when she found out that she was married to Huang Shaotian, Li Xuan and Wu Yuce (who also married each other), Lin Jingyan, Zhang Jiale, and Su Mucheng, saying that her parents would freak out and none of her husbands were actually her type (That resulted with many people offended and a pleased Su Mucheng).

Ye Xiu also almost had a breakdown when he found out that Su Mucheng was married to several other men including himself, oh the horror. By the way, he himself was married to Han Wenqing, with Zhang Jiale as his second husband (some got a good laugh out of it), Huang Shaotian, Wang Jiexi, Yu Wenzhou, Su Mucheng, and Zhou Zekai.

As they traced back the steps of their... deeds. They later find out from Zhou Zekai's phone, which was accidentally recording a video from his pocket where the camera peeked out, that the moment everyone drank a glass, they already lost it.

To sum it up how they all could be married, it was all started from a drunk Zhang Xinjie wanting to be a Cleric like his avatar, Immovable Rock. The other Golden Generation members, mainly Huang Shaotian, supported him nefariously and encouraged him to reach over his dream.

Later on, the Golden Generation members seemed to decide that going to church to get Zhang Xinjie a job as a Cleric is a must, they probably merged Glory with real life by that point, and dragged Zhang Xinjie out. Apparently, when they opened the door, some people decided they also want to go outside and followed them out. Zhou Zekai included, mainly because Ye Xiu was also being dragged around by Huang Shaotian.

They appeared in a run-down church and Xiao Shiqin nicely asked the random priestess inside for a Job Quest. Apparently, at that moment, Zhou Zekai decided to sit it out, content in just following Ye Xiu like a lost puppy as Ye Xiu declared Cleric is mostly useless for five-players dungeon. Fast forward, Zhang Xinjie was declared as a Cleric and happily said that they can marry people off with his new authority.

They all got back and proceeded to randomly marry each others and fill in their names to the red books that they somehow brought back as ‘souvenirs’ from the storage of the registration department beside the church. Once again, they didn’t know how that could happen.

Zhou Zekai’s phone only recorded Fang Rui and Huang Shaotian dragging the large plastic bags which were used to bring those accursed red books for registering marriages. Shouting, “We did it! We did it!” giggling like maniacs. (Later on, Fang Rui and Huang Shaotian refused to go anywhere near that place even if their lives were depended on it)

The last to be married off were Zhou Zekai and Ye Xiu before Zhang Xinjie collapsed midst vow because he had passed his bedtime, and they filled in their own red books instead. That was the reason their red books were almost unreadable. Despite being drunk, Zhang Xinjie could write rather decently. Not nice, but decent.

No one ever wanted to have an alcoholic drink again after that, at least not when everyone also drank it.

Still, although they never wanted to talk about that thing and even treated it as a taboo, they came to love to share things to their ‘spouses’. Even Chu Yunxiu, who bluntly said that none of her ‘husbands’ was her type, she still got the same fond affection from her supposed husbands and she very much returned it back with thoughtful gifts and warm treatments.

The sixth season’s players and so on could only look weirdly whenever their seniors all being too warm and touchy-feely to others from different teams... Even sometimes calling each other disgusting nicknames such as ‘Hubby’ and ‘Wifey’ as a mean to trash talk and other things.

The reason why they didn’t dare to ask what had happened about this ‘taboo’ is precisely because they’re afraid of the answer... Those rookies probably would get a heart attack when they found out.
